Torrents are basically packages of files that are available for download via peer-to-peer file sharing. They are downloaded by torrent client software, which handle the transfer of small parts of the files from multiple users. Torrents can also be used to distribute audio, video, or any other type of computer file. You can think of torrents as large peer-to-peer networks where the common bandwidth is shared between many users. This allows you to download very large files at very fast speeds without running into bandwidth problems with your Internet service provider.
